

Re: Ward Construction

To Whom It May Concern:

Stan Ward and Paul Sommer were instrumental members of the Beaudoin Construction. Both were involved in responsible positions for the construction of the eight million dollar Vintage Hotel in Winter Park, Colorado.

As the principal architect representing HOH Architects, we were pleased to have worked with these construction team members as they demonstrated high levels of competence, conscientiousness and cooperation.

As for the project management, we were very pleased with the professional experience that Stan Ward brought to this project. In addition, we were especially pleased with his everyday problem solving abilities.

Knowing how hard both Paul and Stan worked during the 2½ years of this project, there is no doubt that Ward Construction has the ability and expertise to construct multi-million dollar projects.

To Whom It May Concern:

Stan Ward served as project manager for the construction of the Vintage Resort in Winter Park, Colorado. The negotiated eight million dollar contract consisted of extensive site work and utilities, and the construction of a five story, 120 unit condominium/hotel. Stan's hard work and attention to detail played an integral part in completing the class "A" project.

Despite substantial, unforeseen difficulties with the project, Stan proved to be an effective communicator and his weekly job meetings were an essential part of keeping us informed in detail on the progress of the work.

From my experience, Stan certainly should be considered to do like work.

Sincerely,

Terry L. Helms
